WEST VIRGINIA STATE COLLEGE SPORTS HALL OF FAME

DR. JAMES A. BAILEY
Class of 1950

Dr. James A. Bailey, known as "O'Dude," epitomized the true meaning of student athlete. When Bailey entered West Virginia State College, he found that he was the smallest candidate out for a tackle position, weighing about 200 pounds. Yet, his speed, talent, and tremendous desire earned him a starting position as offensive and defensive tackle for four consecutive years. During his junior year, he received All-Conference, Central Collegiate Athletic Association honors, and during his senior year he received All-Conference honors and All-American honors from the Afro-American.

After graduating from West Virginia State College in 1950 with a Bachelor of Science in education, specializing in science, Bailey proceeded to play two years of football with the Chicago Hornets of the old American Football League. He then entered the U. S. Army serving in Korea at a 1st Lieutenant.

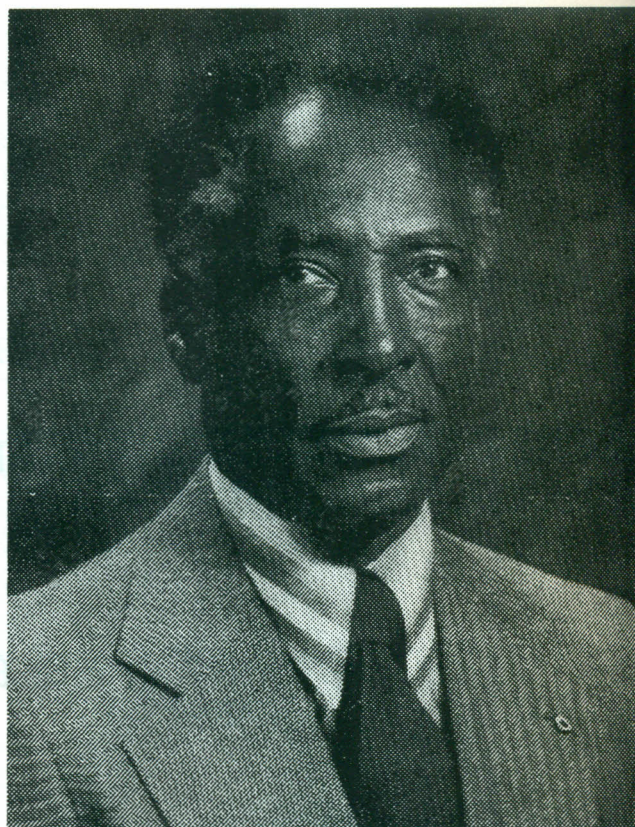

Just prior to entering medical school at Ohio State University, he was involved in a serious accident which left him paralyzed from the waist down. He nonetheless pursued his medical studies, received his degree in 1964 and moved to Atlanta, Georgia to begin private practice while teaching in the medical school at Emory University. His private practice grew to the point that he was needed full time and consequently had to relinquish his teaching responsibilities.

"O'Dude" Bailey and his wife Daisy have four children. Mrs. Bailey is completing her studies in law school and expects to enter the legal field as a practicing attorney in the very near future.

Dr. Bailey is a member of Kappa Alpha Psi Fraternity, Inc.
